A Solution

Anna's aunt Arundhati was sitting in an armchair. Anna's face was red with anger. She pouted her lips and said.

'That naughty boy, he overturned my boat,' she said.

'Don't worry. I'll make another one for you,' Aunt Arundhati tried to console her.

'What if he takes that one too?'

'Ok then...I'll make a few more for you.'

'What if he takes all of them?'

'No, he won't. I'll make a few for him as well.'

'But why should you make boats for him?'

'He seems to be a poor child.'

'Then...Why can't he make them himself? He is so big.'

'May be no one has taught him how to make boats.'

'Why? Doesn't he go to school? He is so rude.'

Aunt Arundhati just smiled.
